La réforme de la formation des enseignants tend le climat dans l'éducation nationale

En septembre, comme à chaque rentrée, le ministère devra placer devant des élèves des enseignants débutants. La différence, c'est que cette fois, une partie d'entre eux auront un handicap supplémentaire : ils seront encore plus débutants que leurs prédécesseurs et n'auront même pour certains jamais vu une classe. Ce sera l'un des effets de l'entrée en application de la réforme de la formation des enseignants, engagée en 2008 par Xavier Darcos, alors ministre de l'éducation, et dont son successeur Luc Chatel a hérité.

Pour le ministère, tout va bien. En organisant le « compagnonnage », c'est-à-dire l'accompagnement des profs débutants par des enseignants expérimentés, cette réforme va introduire du concret et du bon sens à la place des théories pédagogiques issues de 1968. Pour tous les autres dans l'éducation nationale, y compris les adversaires de ces théories, tout va mal. Ils regrettent qu'on prenne le risque de mettre des jeunes non formés face à des élèves qui vont servir de cobayes.

A part quelques officiels, personne ne semble croire vraiment en la viabilité de cette réforme. Dernière déclaration dans un océan de commentaires négatifs : le secrétaire général du principal syndicat des chefs d'établissement, Philippe Tournier, a prédit, le 5 mars, que « la formation des enseignants reviendra sur le tapis dans les années à venir ».

二、Traduisez le texte suivant en français：（40分）

臺東賣菜阿嬤因為長期捐錢行善，被美國時代雜誌評選為「英雄」，因而聲名大噪。從十來歲就守著攤子的賣菜阿嬤陳樹菊，多年刻苦自力，省吃儉用捐出近1,000萬元，幫助貧童並協建圖書館，即使經歷被他人倒債的困境，也設法履行捐款承諾。現在流行說不吃不喝多少年，才能買到一棟自己的房子，61歲的賣菜阿嬤卻是少吃少喝，都要攢錢行善。這樣的素人偉行，就像在臺灣各地付出己力、守護家園的許多小人物一樣令人動容。

請依下文回答第 12 題至第 15 題

With the clouds of difficulty in finding jobs still lingering, plus the intangible pressure of competition within the workplace, office workers are staying in the office later and later.

In fact, working long hours is already a shared situation worldwide. In Japan, the Ministry of Health, Welfare and Labor has issued repeated directives regarding overwork. Some corporations, worried about leaving a paper trail of illegal overtime, figure out ways to remove punch clocks, lock their doors, and turn off their lights while still keeping workers secretly working overtime. Others directly ask their employees to take work home with them. The average American works nearly 1800 hours a year, 200 hours more than in Germany. And even "after work," modern technologies like e-mail and cell phones are like invisible chains preventing employees from ever being out of reach of the boss' demands.

"Reasonable working hours" is one of the factors used in all countries to evaluate labor conditions. Since the beginning of the Industrial Revolution in the 18th century, the war between labor and capital over working hours has been never-ending.

- 12 What will be a good title for this passage?

- (A) Some companies give high salary to attract people to work overtime.
- (B) Some companies ask their employees to work at home after daytime working.
- (C) Several companies put away the punch clock, so their employees could not punch their cards.
- (D) Some companies turn only fewer lights on and ask their employees to work in secret.

- 14 What does “lingering” in the first paragraph mean?
(A) Being very dark (B) Being raised higher and higher
(C) Hiding something from being seen (D) Remaining for a time
- 15 Which of the following statements is implied by the passage?
(A) Germans usually work harder than Americans.
(B) Many countries use working hours to show their development and wealth.
(C) Employees would be asked to work overtime at home by their superiors.
(D) In Japan, progress has been made towards a political compromise between the government and companies.

第 16 題至第 19 題為篇章結構，各題請依文意，從四個選項中選出最合適者，各題答案內容不重複

One of the oldest barriers to innovation is “Not invented here,” a persistent bias of even the most creative people toward their own creations and against those of people who work for other companies. 16 For instance, some major companies have promoted technology alliances with rivals to draw on a wider circle of big brains to work on core technical problems. 17 These efforts arise from the recognition that no single innovator or team, no matter how loyal to an employer or successful in the market, has a monopoly on wisdom.

Nowadays businesses have learned that there is no shame in buying ideas of others. How much of a company’s technology does it create on its own? How much does it buy from others? 18 When it comes to innovation, even companies that maintain their own powerhouse research-and-development units are increasingly aware that valuable ideas can arise anywhere. 19 When acquiring a mature technology, the buyer usually pays big money and takes the risk of a conflict between the internal and outside cultures. Perhaps the most important reason that large companies are willing to gamble on buying technology is that not doing so carries risks, too.

- 16 (A) Companies are also aware that they are betting their money at their own risk.
(B) To counteract the not-invented-here bias, large corporations have urged themselves to action.
(C) These questions are central to dealing squarely with the dilemma of innovation and the pursuit of great ideas.
(D) Instead, large corporations have turned to independent research-and-development teams for new technologies.
- 17 (A) However, companies are willing to travel farther than ever to acquire technologies.
(B) To counteract the not-invented-here bias, large corporations have urged themselves to action.
(C) Instead, large corporations have turned to independent research-and-development teams for new technologies.
(D) Meanwhile, many have embraced the concept of “open innovation” to pursue technologies from any corporate sources available.
- 18 (A) Companies are also aware that they are betting their money at their own risk.
(B) To counteract the not-invented-here bias, large corporations have urged themselves to action.
(C) These questions are central to dealing squarely with the dilemma of innovation and the pursuit of great ideas.
(D) Instead, large corporations have turned to independent research-and-development teams for new technologies.
- 19 (A) Companies are also aware that they are betting their money at their own risk.
(B) However, companies are willing to travel farther than ever to acquire technologies.
(C) These questions are central to dealing squarely with the dilemma of innovation and the pursuit of great ideas.
(D) Meanwhile, many have embraced the concept of “open innovation” to pursue technologies from any corporate sources available.
- 20 It is better to hang out with people better than you. Pick out associates whose behavior is better than yours and you will drift in that direction.
(A) It is not wise to associate with those whose behavior is better than yours because you will lose direction if you do so.
(B) It is better to meet as many people as possible because you will develop better behavior and find your direction.
(C) It is better to hang out more because you will then easily find associates whose behavior is better than yours.
(D) It is wise to be with people whose behavior is better than yours so you will become as good as they are.
