Culinary tourism is when people travel to a different country to enjoy local cuisine. Travelers often look specifically for places with a rich cuisine, food and drink festivals, and cooking classes. Many different destinations are popular for culinary tourism, such as France, Thailand, India, and Japan.

The most basic form of culinary tourism is when travelers go to a country with the aim of trying local dishes. Culinary tourists are interested in dishes that cannot be found in other places. Food and drink festivals increase culinary tourism because they give travelers a chance to sample many different dishes. Cooking classes also give tourists the chance to learn how to cook local dishes and teach them new techniques in the process. A culinary tour may include a mixture of these activities.

Particularly in Thailand, there are cooking schools with a huge range of prices, locations, and cuisines to choose from. A typical half-day course includes an introduction to fundamental ingredients, cooking techniques, and a hands-on chance to prepare and cook at least four dishes. Most schools offer a revolving cast of dishes, making it possible to study for a week without repeating a lesson. Courses often start with a visit to a market and end with a communal lunch where you get to taste your hard work.

The courses at smaller Thai cooking schools in Bangkok offer an ideal home-style learning environment that is different from most of the hotels and restaurants in Thailand. You can experience Thai culture through the arts and secrets of fragrant and delicious Thai cooking with the local people. Experienced chefs will show you the secret recipe of authentic Thai cuisine step-by-step. But keep in mind that Thai cooking is extremely flexible. Although you will be given recipes, the emphasis is on understanding the ingredients and flavors and using your senses to make adjustments when you cook. Classes are intended to be relaxed and fun, reflecting the Thai approach to life. There is no need to have any previous cooking experience, just a love of food and a willingness to experiment.

The use of emoticons, punctuation to depict a facial expression, is an essential part of the lexicon of the Internet. Even if you don't use emoticons, you probably know what they are—little strings of characters, when looked at sideways, are like faces showing some emotion. For example, :-D means laughing, with eyes, a nose, and a capital D for a wide, happy mouth.

All this is the result of a half-joking computer post put up by a faculty member at Carnegie Mellon University on September 19, 1982. Scott Fahlman noticed that some of the jokes being sent around Carnegie Mellon's computer network were being taken seriously by a few people on campus. Someone who didn't get the joke might be upset by an all-in-fun comment and send out an angry response. This wasted a lot of people's time. Fahlman suggested the smiley as a solution. If you write something not to be taken seriously, he suggested, type :-) after it. Some people took up his suggestion and it became part of the Internet shorthand at Carnegie Mellon. The popularity of smiley turned out to be much more than Fahlman expected. Within a few months, it soon spread via messages to other universities and companies.

No one really knows how many emoticons there are, but lists of 100 or so are common. The most popular ones are actually turned into little pictures by word-processing or instant-messaging software. For instance, :-(meaning sadness or disappointment becomes ☹ on your computer screen.

- 76 What is the main purpose of the passage?
- (A) To convince the reader to use emoticons in electronic communication.
 - (B) To introduce the reader to the origin of the smiley.
 - (C) To provide a historical overview of the Internet development.
 - (D) To explain the various meanings of the smiley.
- 77 What does the word lexicon in the first paragraph mean?
- (A) technology
 - (B) communication
 - (C) vocabulary
 - (D) application
- 78 Which of the following best expresses the essential information in the highlighted sentence in the second paragraph?
- (A) Many people at his university liked his suggestion.
 - (B) He was promoted to a better job because of his suggestion.
 - (C) His suggestion helped create the Internet at the university.
 - (D) His suggestion was shortened by the university faculty.
- 79 Which of the following can be inferred from the passage about Fahlman's colleagues at Carnegie Mellon?
- (A) They often posted jokes.
 - (B) They tried to offend each other.
 - (C) They didn't know how to write good messages.
 - (D) They didn't like jokes at all.
- 80 According to the passage, which of the following is true about emoticons?
- (A) They can all be turned into little pictures by common word-processing software.
 - (B) Nobody actually noticed the use of emoticons in text messages.
 - (C) They are symbols used on a network to indicate emotion.
 - (D) No more than 100 emoticons are found nowadays.
