四、閱讀測驗

第一篇：

2,000 years ago, the Celts lived in the area which is now Ireland, the United Kingdom, and northern France. They used to grow their own food, and they considered harvest time to be the end of the year. Every year, they celebrated New Year's Eve on October 31st with a festival called "Samhain". The Celts dressed in animal heads and skins for this festival, and their priests, the Druids, built huge bonfires which the Celts gathered around to burn crops as sacrifices to their ancient gods. October 31st marked the end of summer and the beginning of winter, and the Celts believed that on that night, the ghosts of the dead returned to Earth. The Celts thought the ghosts helped the Druids to predict the future.

In about 43 AD, after the Romans conquered the Celts, two Roman festivals, Feralia (when the Romans remembered their dead) and Pomona Day (when the Romans honored their goddess of fruits and gardens) were combined with the Celtic Samhain festival. Later, in the 7th century, when Christianity reached the land of the Celts, the Pope made November 1st All Saints' Day. This was a time for people to honor saints and martyrs. This celebration was also called All Hallows or Halloween. The night before it became known as All Hallows' Eve, which later changed to Halloween.

Today, people celebrate Halloween with black cats and magic from Samhain, apples and harvest from Pomona Day, and ghosts and skeletons from All Saints' Day. It's a thrilling mixture of fun and fear.

第二篇：

According to some authoritative anthropological studies in the last five decades, life expectancy of human beings was short for millennia. The few people who grew old were assumed, because of their years, to have won the favor of the gods. The typical person was fortunate to reach 40.

Beginning in the 19th century, that slowly changed. Since 1840, life expectancy at birth has risen about three months with each passing year. In 1840, life expectancy at birth in Sweden, a much-studied nation owing to its record-keeping, was 45 years for women; today it's 83 years. The United States displays roughly the same trend. When the 20th century began, life expectancy at birth in America was 47 years; now newborns are expected to live 79 years. If about three months continue to be added with each passing year, by the middle of this century, American life expectancy at birth will be 88 years. By the end of the century, it will be 100 years.

Viewed globally, the lengthening of life spans seems independent of any single, specific event. It didn't accelerate much as antibiotics and vaccines became common. Nor did it retreat much during wars or disease outbreaks. A graph of global life expectancy over time looks like an escalator rising smoothly. The trend holds, in most years, in individual nations rich and poor; the whole world is riding the escalator.

Projections of ever-longer life spans assume no incredible medical discoveries—rather, that the escalator ride simply continues. If anti-aging drugs or genetic therapies are found, the climb could accelerate. Centenarians may become the norm, rather than rarities who generate a headline in the local newspaper.

【3】46. In what style is the passage mainly written?

- ① Argumentative.
② Comparative.
③ Expository.
④ Procedural.

【3】47. What does "that" in the second paragraph refer to?

- ① Anthropology.
② Human origin.
③ Life expectancy.
④ The authority.

【1】48. Why is life expectancy at birth in Sweden mentioned in the passage?

- ① Because it has documented the life expectancy of its citizens for long.
② Because it has set an example for people in the United States to follow.
③ Because the life expectancy of its people has been the longest among all countries.
④ Because the life expectancy of its people has grown steadily with each passing year.

【4】49. According to the passage, what impacts have world events had on life expectancy?

- ① They have shortened life expectancy.
② They have lengthened life expectancy.
③ They have made life expectancy rise smoothly.
④ They have had no significant effect on life expectancy.

【2】50. According to the passage, which of the following may be inferred?

- ① Life expectancy dramatically decreased during the Second World War.
② Life expectancy before the 19th century had remained almost unchanged.
③ Discoveries of anti-aging drugs and genetic therapies will become rare in local papers.
④ People living less than one hundred years will be soon regarded as extremely precious.
