One of the most beautiful sights in the bird world is the male peafowl, or peacock, strutting proudly about with its magnificent tail raised and its richly colored tail feathers glistening in the sunlight.

The peacock's many-colored "tail" is not really a tail at all. It is a fan composed of stiff, beautiful feathers. This fan is supported by the peacock's true tail. In addition to the glorious plumage, a peacock has a crest of upright feathers on its head. The peahen, or female peafowl, has no such grand coloring. Instead, the peahen is usually colored dull brown and has neither a fan nor a crest.

The peafowl is a member of the pheasant family. It may be found living wild in the jungles of Asia and of the East Indies. Tame peafowls may be seen in nearly all other parts of the world, where, although their flesh and their eggs are both good for table use, they are generally kept as ornaments or curiosities in parks and in zoos.

Peafowls in a wild state feed on grass, grain, frogs, insects, and snails. In captivity, however, they thrive on grains commonly fed to poultry.
