四、閱讀測驗

Modern offices are very different from those of the past. These days, many offices are designed to be environmentally friendly. In the past, the environment was rarely a concern. Now companies are learning that helping the environment can also save them money.

Workplaces have also become safer for employees. In the past, companies wanted to avoid injuries. But they usually focused on accidents and not on injuries that happen slowly when employees repeated the same actions over and over again. Now workplaces are beginning to focus on preventing all sorts of injuries and health problems.

Maybe the biggest change in modern offices is the flexibility they offer workers. Many employers now provide employees with flexible working hours. Some even allow their employees to work from home.

31. What is the main idea of this article?
- (A) Modern offices are great places to be.                      (B) It is easier to work now than in the past.
(C) Offices have changed a lot over time.                      (D) Designers have improved modern offices.
32. Why does the writer believe offices are now safer?
- (A) Employers now try to avoid all kinds of injuries and health problems.
(B) Offices are now much better for the environment.
(C) Workplaces give employees more flexibility.
(D) There have been many changes in office.
33. According to the writer, what were companies concerned with in the past?
- (A) Helping the Earth.    (B) Preventing accidents.
(C) Protecting the environment.                                      (D) Helping employees be flexible.
34. What do environmentally-friendly offices have in common with offices that are focused on safety?
- (A) Both are less exciting places.
(B) Both show an interest in saving the earth.
(C) Both represent a considerate way toward their employees.
(D) Both indicate that the company has flexible hours.
35. Where would you probably find this article?
- (A) Business Today              (B) Adventure Travel              (C) Photography              (D) Outdoor Living

If you think that your colleagues are making your life more difficult than it should be, you need to beware that the impact may be more far-reaching than you imagine. That is, the negative feeling resulting from your colleagues may have a ripple effect that extends as far as your wife's workplace; the unpleasant feeling would follow you home, leading to unhappiness for your spouse and family members, and ultimately casting a negative influence on their jobs. Dr. Merideth J. Ferguson, a professor of management at Baylor University, empirically established this claim.

Using statistical software to explore the relationship, if any, between employee reports of co-worker rudeness and reports by the employee's family members, Dr. Ferguson found that exposure to rudeness in one's workplace created stress and unpleasant feeling for both spouse and family. Most importantly, she found a direct, positive relationship between the unpleasant feeling that the employee experienced and the stress at the spouse' (or family members') workplace.

Being treated unkindly by a colleague can hurt our self-esteem, and cause anxiety and depression. If we go home with this negative emotion and energy, the happiness of the people that we love and care can be negatively affected. Despite this awareness, keeping unpleasant workplace feelings outside the home can be difficult, especially when it is chronic. To resolve the above problem, Dr. Ferguson suggested that we ought to be more mindful of where we are and switch to different mindsets in different contexts; when we are at our workplace, we need to switch to the rational mode and devote our full attention and energy to work; when we are home, we have to switch to the tender/emotional mode and focus strictly on family and friends. If none of the above work, we then seek professional help by talking to a counselor or psychologist about the stress or any negative feeling we have; this can help lessen the emotional ripple effect resulting from work.

36. Which of the following statements may best serve as the title of this passage?

- (A) The workplace dynamics and its impact on your career development.
- (B) The ripple effect of your emotional problem at your workplace.
- (C) An outlet for emotional breakdown.
- (D) The mindset for a professional.

37. Which of the following statements is true?

- (A) We should first seek professional help before we examine our own mindset.
- (B) Our negative feelings only affect our spouses, but not other family members.
- (C) We can be immune to any unpleasant feelings arising from our workplace.
- (D) Facing our work and family with the right mindset can help reduce the negative emotional impact.

38. What does "empirically established this claim" mean?

- (A) To prove the validity of this view.
- (B) To reject the credibility of this claim.
- (C) To provide additional support for this view.
- (D) To keep people informed of this claim.

39. In the context of this article, the word "explore" in line 7 is closest in meaning to:

- (A) support
- (B) monitor
- (C) show
- (D) investigate

40. How do you describe the author's attitude toward seeking counseling help in case of emotional disturbance?

- (A) neutral
- (B) doubtful
- (C) positive
- (D) biased
