As such, Wimbledon is awash in long-lasting traditions and features, such as the habit of calling the men's and women's competitions "Gentlemen's" and "Ladies'," 31 . But arguably the most notable aspect of the event is the all-white dress code for all participants. Why does the tournament specify that its players dress " 32 in white" or "almost entirely in white?" The short answer is "because it's in the dress code." But it's in the dress code for a reason: namely, when the code was written in the genteel 1880s, sweat stains were considered so improper and unsightly that it was decided that white should be worn to minimize their 33 , as sweat is more apparent on colorful clothing. From that period on, "tennis whites" were considered the standard 34 for well-heeled tennis players, which described everyone who played in the first Wimbledon tournaments. The all-white dress code, however, has not always been popular with players. The most extreme case of this was when superstar Andre Agassi refused to play at Wimbledon from 1988 to 1990 in part because the dress code prevented him from wearing the flashy clothing that he was most comfortable wearing. When the criticism of some of the greatest players of all time is not enough to get Wimbledon to 35 its dress code, there is a good chance that we will continue to see Wimbledon participants clad in all white for a good long time.

More than 100,000 people have downloaded the Taipei Bus Station app since it was released last year.

Consumers have shown more interest in 36 ticket purchases due to the Wuhan coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic, Taipei Bus Station officials said at a press conference on Friday. The app allows passengers to buy tickets, select seats, and board 37 a simple QR code. With their phones, people can also check departure times and see how many seats are available on each 38. Passengers can purchase tickets from five bus companies. Passengers can switch their tickets 30 minutes before the scheduled departure time, 39 it is with the same bus company.

In order to encourage more people to use the app, between May 29 and Aug. 31, bus riders who use the app to make purchases will get NT$20 to NT$40 cash back on each ticket. This ______ is expected to attract more people to use the new app.

Barbara Walters is an American journalist known particularly for her highly effective technique in television interviews of world-renowned figures.

Walters graduated in 1951 from Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, New York, and, after brief employment in an advertising agency, she became assistant to the publicity director for New York City's NBC-affiliated television station. There she gained experience in writing and producing for television. Soon she was hired as a news and public affairs producer and writer by the CBS television network. In 1961 she became a writer for the popular NBC morning show Today and did occasional on-air feature stories.

Walters was hired in 1964 as the "Today Girl," a job that had traditionally involved little more than being attractive, making small talk, and reading commercials. She soon expanded that narrow role, making a place for herself among the Today show's panel of commentators and newsreaders. Her intelligence and camera presence, together with the solid journalistic work she did on her feature stories, made her one of the most popular personalities on the program, and in 1974 she was named cohost of Today with Hugh Downs. The following year she won an Emmy for her work on the show.

In 1976 Walters made headlines by signing a five-year contract with ABC that made her the first woman to co-anchor an evening network news program and, with a salary of $1 million per year, the highest-paid journalist at that time. In 1978 she left the program. The following year she joined the ABC newsmagazine show 20/20 as correspondent, becoming cohost with Downs in 1984; she remained with the program until 2004.

Walters was particularly known for her interviews with world notables. A tenacious pursuer of elusive figures in the news, she obtained exclusive interviews for her popular Barbara Walters Specials, which premiered in 1976. Her disarmingly direct questioning drew many subjects into frequently interesting and occasionally provocative moments of self-revelation.

- [3] 41. What is the main idea of this passage?
- ① Barbara Walters made millions of dollars as a successful anchorwoman.
- ② Barbara Walters was very effective interviewing world famous people.
- 3 It gives a brief history about who Barbara Walters was and how she became a successful journalist and TV host.
- 4 It describes how she made headlines by co-anchoring an evening network news program.
- [3] 42. According to this passage, when did Barbara Walters learn to write and produce for television?
- ① When she was working in an advertising agency.
- ② After she became a publicity director of CBS.
- ③ When she served as an assistant to the publicity director for a local television station.
- 4 When she became a writer for the popular NBC morning show Today.
- [2] 43. How did Barbara Walters become one of the most popular figures in the Today show?
- ① Because she was intelligent and attractive on TV.
- ② Because she demonstrated her intelligence and did the solid journalistic work on her feature stories.
- 3 Because Hugh Downs appreciated her ability and gave her a chance to cohost with him.
- 4 Because she won an Emmy for her work on the show in 1975.

第二篇:

E.Sun Bank yesterday uncovered a program which allows social enterprises to take out loans more easily and at lower interest rates to help improve their development. The interest rates for regular corporate loans are usually at least 2 percent. But E.Sun bank would provide loans of up to NT$3 million for each social enterprise at 1.6 percent interest. The total amount of lending for the new program is limited to NT$100 million, which means at least 30 social enterprises could benefit from it. The bank is cooperating with the Taipei City Government for the program and only social enterprises registered in the city can apply for loans.

Because there is no complete and official definition of a social enterprise in Taiwan, the bank would ask four business consultants known for helping the development of social businesses to recommend qualified enterprises. After being recommended, the enterprises would need to apply to the Small and Medium Business Credit Guarantee Fund of Taiwan (Taiwan SMEG) for qualification, as the fund would provide credit guarantees for them. Then the firms would need to pass a review by the city government.

It is not easy for social enterprises to take out loans, as their staff usually do not know how to prepare financial statements, which are crucial for banks when evaluating loan applications. In addition, because social enterprises' profits are not as high as those of regular companies and as they do not have enough assets to be used as guarantee, they often end up paying higher interest. Taiwan SMEG, which normally offers credit guarantees of 80 percent, said that it would lift the guarantee percentage to 90 percent for social enterprises. The move would help reduce risks for the bank, and if a social enterprise failed to pay a loan, Taiwan SMEG would recognize 90 percent of the debt, while the bank would recognize the rest.

- [3] 46. What social enterprises are qualified to apply for the loan?
- ① Those credited by E.Sun Bank
- ② Those dedicated to help young talents
- 3 Those registered in Taipei
- Those supported by business consultants
- [1] 47. What's the task of the four consultants?
- ① To recommend social enterprises
- ② To suggest loan size for each social enterprise
- ③ To interview the CEO of each social enterprise
- ① To visit the head office of each social enterprise
- [4] 48. Who will recognize more debts should the social enterprises fail to pay back the loan?
- ① The City government
- ② E.Sun Bank
- ③ The four consultants
- 4 Taiwan SMEG
- [1] 49. Why is the program issued by E.Sun Bank so attractive to social enterprises?
- ① The interest rate is lower.
- ② They can get a bigger loan.
- 3 They don't need to write financial reports.
- They are likely to make more profits.
- [3] 50. How many social enterprises are expected to get a loan?
- ① At most 16
- ② Under 26
- 3 About 30
- 4 At least 50
