The process of language extinction is natural. Languages have always 11 into other languages. For example, Latin turned into Italian, and Anglo-Saxon into English. Languages may disappear for many reasons: natural disasters, wars, and diseases. In the 1960s, a group of Western explorers exposed a village in Venezuela to influenza. Having no immunity to the disease, almost the entire village died. That village was the only place where the Trumai language was spoken. In some cases, governments have 12 minority groups to abandon their native languages. In the United States, Canada, and Australia, young speakers of native languages were once forced to attend boarding schools where the use of their mother tongues was 13. Mass media, such as movies and television, are often 14 for destroying languages, but according to an African language specialist, the biggest threats are actually improved transportation and economic pressure. Young adults move to cities and, to compete for jobs, must learn 15 languages. They then do not teach their children their native tongues.

In Asia, there are a wide variety of cuisines. A typical Chinese meal comprises a carbohydrate, meat or fish and a vegetable. The Chinese cuisine is 16 by its different origin. Often being referred to as the Chinese food by foreigners, Cantonese cuisine from the south of China, for instance, scarcely uses fresh herbs in the cooking. Szechuan and Hunan cuisine from the west of China, however, contains many spicy dishes. Japanese cuisine, on the other hand, values the presentation, spices, and quality of the food. A 17 such as rice or noodles accompanies several side dishes. Some renowned Japanese cuisine includes sushi, sashimi, tempura, and sake. In Korea, spicy food like kimchi is perhaps the most famous one as garlic and chili peppers are widely used in the cooking. They are, namely, the 18 ingredients in most dishes. In Southeast Asia, many dishes and flavors abound. People in Vietnam emphasize the use of herbs, fresh produce, and sauces, but tastes vary in different areas of the country. People in North Vietnam favor spicy food like pho noodles dishes while people in the south prefer sweet tastes and use the herbs 19. In Thailand likewise, cuisine differs according to geographical differences. In the south, the use of coconut milk in the curries is essential 20 it is the use of lime that is crucial in the northeast. In almost every part of Thailand, both rice and noodles are liked by people. The only difference from other Asian cuisines is that Thai food is usually eaten with a fork and spoon.

“Exercising may be the best antidote to chronic pain,” say doctors at a new clinic for dealing with pain. “People with chronic pain need to stop lying around, go out more and start exercising.” To most people, the intuitive reaction to acute pain is to stop moving and to try to protect the source of pain. But it seems that this is often counterproductive, especially in the case of back pain, which after headaches and tiredness, has become the third most common reason for people to visit their doctors. Painful backs now account for millions of days off work.

Lack of exercise slowly decreases the flexibility and strength of muscles, so it is more difficult to take pressure off the site of pain. Exercise is essential. It releases endorphins, the body’s “feel-good” chemicals, which are natural painkillers. In fact, these are so important that researchers are now looking for drugs that can maintain an optimum level of endorphins in the body.

Most patients are prescribed drugs rather than exercise. However, since finding the cause of backache is not so easy, doctors frequently do not know the exact cause of the discomfort, and as the pain continues, patients end up taking stronger doses or a series of different drugs.

A generation of new pain clinics now operates on the basis that drugs are best avoided. Once patients have undergone the initial physical and psychological check up, their medication is cut down as much as possible. Taking patients off drugs also prepares them for physical activity by making them more physically and mentally alert. In some pain-relief clinics, patients begin the day with muscle contraction and relaxation exercises, followed by an hour on exercise bikes. Later in the day, they practice t'ai chi, a Chinese system of calisthenics, self-defense, and meditation. This compares with an average of two-and-a-half hours' physiotherapy a week in a conventional hospital program. "The idea is to strengthen and to increase stamina, flexibility and confidence," explains Bill Wiles, a consultant pain doctor in Liverpool. "Patients undergoing this therapy get back to work and resume healthy active lifestyles much sooner than those subjected to more conservative treatment".

- 21 What is the best title for the passage?
- (A) The Taming of Pain (B) The Release of Endorphins
(C) The Importance of Exercising (D) A Generation of New Pain Clinics
- 22 According to the passage, which is NOT the instinctive response to severe pain?
- (A) Protecting the origin of pain (B) Staying still
(C) Lying down (D) Exercising
- 23 Based on the passage, which statement is true?
- (A) T'ai chi prevents people from increasing stamina.
(B) Endorphin is an effective antidote prescribed by doctors.
(C) Physiotherapy has been proven not effective in stopping the pain.
(D) Fatigue is one of the top three reasons why people see a doctor.
- 24 When a patient visits a new pain clinic, what is he likely advised to do?
- (A) To decrease endorphins.
(B) To reduce the amount of medicine he is taking.
(C) To protect the source of pain.
(D) To lie down to get enough sleep.
- 25 According to the passage, why does new therapy help patients resume healthy active lifestyles sooner than conservative treatment?
- (A) Because it directly treats the source of pain.
(B) Because it prescribes stronger doses and a series of different drugs.
(C) Because it enhances patients' physical and psychological conditions.
(D) Because it gives patients the drugs that act locally on the inflammation, such as aspirin.
